Pictures Worth a Thousand Words

Photos show smiling Giffords but give little info about her recovery

Houston

Two portraits of a smiling Rep. Gabrielle Giffords gave the nation its closest look yet at the congresswoman's remarkable recovery less than six months after she was shot in the head at point-blank range outside a supermarket.

The pictures posted Sunday on Facebook were the first clear photos of the Arizona congresswoman who rose to national prominence after a gunman opened fire on her in January as she met with constituents in Tucson. Six people were killed and 13 others wounded.

But the images left unanswered many questions about her cognitive abilities and when — or even if — she will be able to resume her job in Congress.

"It's striking. She does look great," said Dr. Richard Riggs, chairman of physical medicine and rehabilitation at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles.

Still, Riggs, who has not been involved in Giffords' treatment but has been tracking her progress, said the months after her release will be critical. Patients who have suffered traumatic brain injury can become easily

Rep. Gabrielle Giffords sits next to her mother, Gloria Giffords, on May 17 in Houston.

Road to Recovery

In the photo above, Rep. Gabrielle Giffords is shown smiling alongside her mother. In the other photo, the left side of Giffords' head appears slightly swollen, and a healed scar from a breathing tube can be seen in her neck. Giffords spokesman C.J. Karamargin said the congresswoman looks different now. Her hair is shorter because her head was shaved ahead of surgery to repair a gap in her skull that had initially been left open to allow her brain to swell. Doctors also fixed what appear to be subtle inequities between her eyes seen in the pictures. (AP)

String of Questions

Chief of Staff Pia Carusone indicated Thursday that, despite reports that Giffords is talking and walking, she remains a shadow of her bubbly self. The congresswoman can verbalize basic needs but struggles to string together more complex thoughts. If her recovery "plateaued" now, Carusone said, Giffords' quality of life would be far less than what she had known before the shooting. Carusone stopped short of answering whether Giffords will resume her post in the House of Representatives or whether she'll run for the Senate. Giffords has until May 2012 to decide. (AP) disoriented, have trouble prioritizing, suffer memory loss and have difficulty recognizing people. Most cognitive recovery occurs in the first six months to a year after an injury. In the second year, progress sharply drops.

"The picture tells us that physically she's having what would appear to be a strong recovery from that standpoint," Riggs said. "But it does not tell us anything about the cognitive capabilities or where she is on the path of independent living much less going back to a job."

Giffords' aides say she could be ready to be released from a rehabilitation center later this month or in early July. AMANDA LEE MYERS AND RAMIT PLUSHNICK-MASTI (AP)

Rep. Weiner Resists Calls to Quit

New photos emerge as Democrats, GOP call for resignation

Washington

The second-ranking House Democrat on Sunday joined the party leadership in urging Rep. Anthony Weiner to quit because of his sexting scandal, a request the New York lawmaker has sidestepped in favor of a temporary leave of absence.

The Republican Party chairman criticized Democratic leaders for not taking a more forceful stand earlier on the affair, which has overshadowed much of the legislative business on Capitol Hill over the past week.

People call for Rep. Anthony Weiner to quit in front of his New York office Sunday.

Weiner has acknowledged exchanging messages and photos, ranging from sexually suggestive to explicit, with several women online. The latest to surface appeared on the gossip website TMZ.

The photos posted Sunday were purportedly taken in the House members' gym and show a shirtless Weiner with a towel around his waist and his hand on his crotch.

Rep. Steny Hoyer of Maryland, the No. 2 House Democrat, said it would be "extraordinarily difficult" for Weiner to continue to represent his constituents effectively.

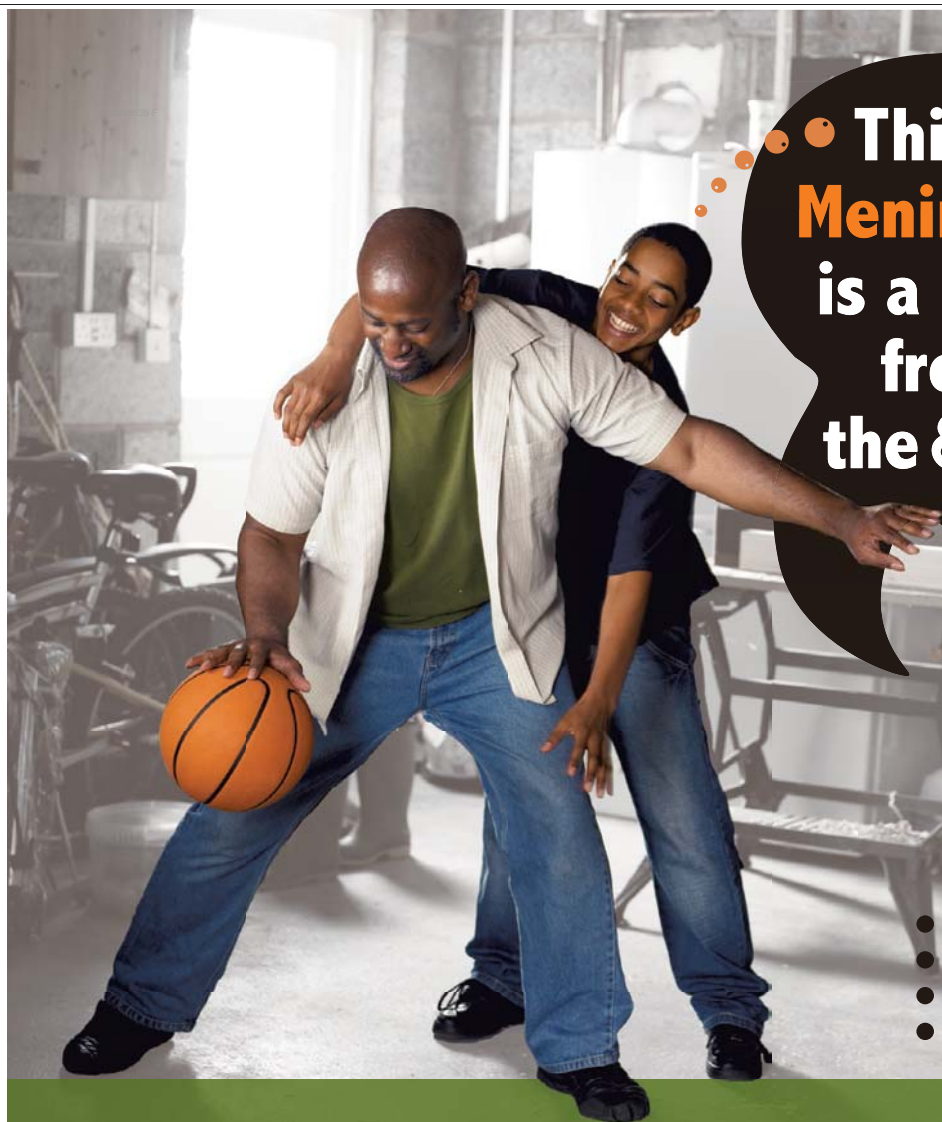

Weiner announced Saturday that he was entering professional treatment at an undisclosed location and wanted a leave of absence from Congress. ANDREW MIGA (AP)

Study: Obesity Surgery Fails to Extend Survival

Chicago

Very obese older men hoping to live longer may be let down by a new long-term study that found weight-loss surgery didn't increase survival for people like them — at least during the first seven years.

Prior studies have found stomach stapling and other obesity surgeries improved survival rates after two to 10 years. The new study in mostly older males suggests not everyone gains equally from surgery, or a survival benefit may show up later in older men. (AP)

Syria Wrests Town Into Order

Assad's forces regain control of hot spot of recent rebellion

Beirut

Elite Syrian troops backed by helicopters and tanks regained control Sunday of a town where police and soldiers joined forces with the protesters they were ordered to shoot — a decisive assault from a government prepared for an all-out battle to keep power.

Troops led by President Bashar Assad's brother shelled Jisr al-Shughour as the gunships hovered overhead, paving the way for scores of tanks and armored personnel carriers. By early afternoon, the army was in control.

Sunday's developments, and actions by opponents of the Syrian government, marked a major departure from what had been a largely peaceful protest movement. Among them: the discovery of 10 uniformed bodies in a mass grave and the increasing willingness of mutineers and residents to fight back.

"The Syrian army is fighting itself," said Muhieddine Lathkani, a London-based Syrian writer and intellectual.

Meanwhile ...

Turkey's ruling party surged to a third term in parliamentary elections Sunday, setting the stage for the rising regional power to pursue economic growth, assertive diplomacy and an overhaul of the military-era constitution. However, the Justice and Development

Party of Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan fell short of a two-thirds majority in parliament, which will force it to seek support for constitutional change from other political groups. Still, its supporters, shown, celebrated. (AP) government control since the uprising began in mid-March, mirrored his father's 1980 assault there. It was a clear message to anyone contemplating defiance.

Syrians who were among thousands to flee for the nearby Turkish border said about 60 mutineers were defending the town alongside some 200 unarmed residents. Their fate was unknown late Sunday, but the government report-

Hoax Revealed

An entry Sunday on a blog purportedly by a lesbian Syrian-American in Damascus said its four-month saga was a hoax. "Tom MacMaster" in Istanbul, Turkey, signed the post, saying the blog's narrative was fictional but insists it "created an important voice for issues I feel strongly about." ed three deaths in the fighting — one of its own soldiers and two unidentified men whose bodies were shown to reporters.

Turkey, about 12 miles away, has given sanctuary to more than 5,000 fleeing Syrians. Turkey has accused the Assad regime of "savagery," though Arab governments have been mostly silent during the crackdown, fearing that the alternative to Assad would be chaos.

The government's assault of Jisr al-Shughour was the most serious since the uprising against Assad's regime began in mid-March.

Syria's government has said 500 members of the security forces have died, including 120 last week in Jisr al-Shughour. More than 1,400 Syrians have died in the crackdown, activists say. (AP)

Libyan Rebels Claim Successes, Indicating Renewed Campaign

Misrata, Libya

From the east and west, working with NATO airstrikes, resurgent rebels battled Libyan forces Sunday along the Mediterranean coast, rebel commanders reported. The government said their victory claims were "wishful reporting."

Insurgents had reported fighting to retake the Mediterranean port city of Zawiya, 18 miles west of Tripoli, a prize that would put them within striking distance of the capital and cut off one of Moammar Gadhafi's last supply routes from Tunisia.

But government spokesman

Moussa Ibrahim said Gadhafi's forces had driven off the attackers, and reporters taken to Zawiya saw the green national flag flying.

The rebel thrust at Zawiya and reported movements farther east suggested the stalemated uprising had been reinvigorated, and that Gadhafi's defenders may become stretched thin. "Over the past three days, we set fire under the feet of Gadhafi forces everywhere," Col. Hamid al-Hasi, a rebel battalion commander, said.

NATO has stepped up bombing of Gadhafi's compound in the center of Tripoli, striking it and a military airport on Sunday. (AP)

The two married in 1947, and on Friday, Elizabeth made her husband the Lord High Admiral of the Navy, a title she had held since 1964. Philip had been a prominent naval officer until he gave up his career to be at his wife's side when she became queen. (AP)

PM Discord Deals Blow to Palestinian Unity

Rival factions split over candidate amid reconciliation efforts

Jerusalem

Ceremoniously announced last month, reconciliation between the two rival Palestinian factions, secular Fatah and Islamist Hamas, hit a serious snag Sunday, a new sign that the effort is not going well.

In the latest blow, Hamas on Sunday rejected Fatah's proposal that internationally respected economist Salam Fayyad remain prime minister. The announcement boded poorly for a new round of unity talks set to begin Tuesday.

But a breakdown in the reconciliation process could potentially bolster U.S. efforts to restart peace talks, since Israel has balked at engaging a Palestinian government that includes Hamas militants.

Differences over how to deal with Israel were at the heart of the breakup of the previous Palestinian unity government. Fatah favors

Backstory

Fatah and Hamas have been at loggerheads since Hamas, an Islamic militant group, won parliamentary elections in 2006. peace with Israel, while Hamas rejects international demands to recognize Israel.

Last month, the Palestinian rivals announced plans to form a caretaker government to prepare for elections next year.

spiking across system

Washington

Judge Stephen G. Milliken was waiting at the Gallery Place Metro station for a train Thursday morning when a youth snagged his iPhone from his hand.

The D.C. Superior Court judge isn't alone in having his electronic device stolen. Metro Transit Police said they've seen a spike in "snatch-and-grab" robberies of iPhones and similar devices.

"We've had a great increase in the snatching of iPhones and iPads over the last couple of years, not just here but in transit systems across the country," Metro Transit Police Chief Michael Taborn said.

In Metro's system, there were 508 such robberies, which can include purse snatchings, in 2010.
That's up from 425 in 2009. From January through March, there were 99 such incidents, according to police.

In Milliken's case, he tried to get his phone back, a move transit police do not recommend.

About 9:15 a.m., Milliken was standing on the platform of the Red Line when a young man jumped off a train and snatched his iPhone from his hand and ran off. Milliken then chased the youth down to the Green/Yellow line platform. He grabbed the youth and took back what he thought was his iPhone, authorities said.

But it turned out the phone wasn't the judge's.

"It was obvious he had other iPhones," Taborn said of the youth.

The youth, who transit police said is 16 to 21 years old, broke free from the judge's hold and got away. Police are investigating the case.

Dan Stessel, a Metro spokesman, said stealing smartphones and other electronic devices "is a crime of opportunity." He advises people to "take common-sense steps to prevent" such thefts and not carry such devices out in the open on Metro.

Police said the crime usually happens near train doors and station exits, when people aren't paying attention and are looking at their device. That's typically when, Stessel said, "a suspect snatches it out of their hands and runs."

Stessel encouraged users of the latest version of the iPhone to register their devices in Apple's free tracking system so, in the event of a loss or theft, the device can be tracked by a Global Positioning System. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Waterfront Plan Protested in Va.

Residents oppose idea to develop stretch on Potomac with hotels

Alexandria

About 200 Alexandria residents marched through Old Town on Saturday and converged on City Hall to protest a $51 million plan to bring hotels and other new development to the city's waterfront.

Opponents of the proposed project, who have organized as citizens for an Alternative Alexandria Waterfront Plan, said they urged the city council to consider designs that include more parks; focus on arts and Alexandria's history; and have no hotels.

"They are not representing us. This is the bottom line," Mark Weiner, 42, of Alexandria said of city council members.

Artist Peg Bruhn works in the Torpedo Factory Art Center on the Potomac waterfront.

The plan "favors the desires of the developer over the will of the people."

The waterfront plan calls for connected parks and landscaped walkways along three miles of Potomac River shoreline, from Daingerfield Island Park to the north, to Jones Point Park to the south. The proposal includes hotels, restaurants and public access to the water.

Critics of the plan have been pushing city leaders to reconsider. At a meeting Saturday of the Alexandria City Council, city planners presented an alternative, $220 million park-heavy proposal for the waterfront. And afterward, some council members voiced concern about the criticism.

Council member Rob Krupicka, a Democrat, asked whether the council could move forward with a vision for the waterfront that would create the walkways and parks but would not include rezoning three key properties, two of which are owned by The Washington Post Co.

I don't see how we move forward with ... such a large part of community opposed to rezoning," said council member Redella S. "Del" Pepper, a Democrat.

The council is set to discuss the waterfront plan further Tuesday. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Rep. Van Hollen Calls for Weiner To Step Down

Washington

Rep. Chris Van Hollen is calling for the immediate resignation of House colleague Anthony Weiner.

Hollen, a Maryland Democrat and the ranking member of the House Budget Committee, said in a statement Saturday that Weiner's "repeated violation of the public trust is unacceptable." He says Weiner should leave Congress immediately.

His statement echoed similar resignation calls Saturday from House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi and Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz, the party chairwoman.

Weiner has admitted sending several women sexually suggestive and explicit Internet messages. Police say they have finished their investigation. (AP)

New Look for the Capitol Police

Washington

Police officers responsible for Capitol Hill are engaged in some friendly competition — involving squad cars.

The U.S. Capitol Police, in the process of a fleet redesign that officials believe will save money while producing sleeker-looking cars, are entering its new vehicles in a national design competition.

"We're proud of our design. We want it to be shown out to everyone. We want the public to be proud of it. It's a bold new look," said Marcelino Santos, manager of the Capitol Police vehicle maintenance division.

area in and around the U.S. Capitol building and protect members of Congress and their families.

"By the end of 2012 here, all our 201 primary cars will be new with the new design," Santos said.

Santos said the project is expected to yield about $2 million in savings, largely through a lease agreement with the General Services Administration, which can buy in bulk. ERIC TUCKER (AP)

Researchers warn at the potential to inspect fetal DNA is a two-edged sword

New York

Imagine being pregnant and taking a simple blood test that lays bare the DNA of your fetus. And suppose that a test could reveal not only medical conditions like Down syndrome, but also traits like eye color and height. And the risk for developing depression or Alzheimer's disease. And the chances of being gay.

So far that's still science fiction. But scientists have been taking some baby steps in that direction. And some ethicists say it's time to start talking about what that could mean for parents and society.

Scanning fetal DNA from a blood sample will be "without question a major medical advance that promises to greatly improve current prenatal care," says Hank King, an associate professor at UC Hastings College of Law in San

Why Now?

The trigger for the discussion over prenatal testing is a couple of papers published in December. In preliminary results, teams showed that they could essentially reconstruct a baby's genetic makeup by recovering fragments of fetal DNA from the mother's bloodstream. That, plus the rapidly falling cost of DNA analysis, would open the door to inspecting individual genes, a leap ahead for prenatal tests. (AP)

New Test for Down Syndrome

THE RISK NOW: Usually, for a firm diagnosis of Down syndrome, a needle procedure called amniocentesis, done almost four months or more into the pregnancy, is required. Sometimes it's an earlier test called CVS, or chorionic villus sampling, which collects a bit of tissue from the placenta. Both pose a tiny but real chance for miscarriage, and highly skilled practitioners are not available everywhere.

A FUTURE SOLUTION: By this time next year, there may be an alternative — with accurate results as early as nine weeks into the pregnancy. Companies are racing to market a more accurate blood test than those available now that could spare many women the need for an amnio or CVS. It would retrieve fetal DNA from the mother's bloodstream. And the answer could come before the pregnancy is obvious to others. For some women, that might mean abortion is a more tenable choice. For others, it could be a mixed blessing. (AP)

Down Traits

Those with Down syndrome usually show mild to moderate disability in intellect and skills for everyday living. Physically, they often have a flat face with a short neck and smaller hands and feet and are at risk for complications such as heart defects and hearing problems. Life expectancy is about 60 years. (AP)

5 to 10 The number of years within which doctors may be able to conduct prenatal tests for 100 to 200 diseases, albeit many of them rare, estimates Stanford University law professor Hank Greely, who studies the implications of biomedical technologies. (AP)

Francisco who studies genetic testing. But bringing it into practice "raises significant practical, legal, ethical and social challenges," she says.

"This really changes the experience of what it will be like to be pregnant and have a child," said Marcy Darnovsky of the Center for Genetics and Society in Berkeley, Calif. "I keep coming up with the word 'game-changer.'"

She wonders whether parents would withhold their commitment to a pregnancy until test results show a fetus is "good enough" to be born. And what, she asks, is good enough?

Results can be complex. For example, how is a woman supposed to balance a 25 percent increase in risk for one disease versus a 15 percent decrease in another? Darnovsky asks.

She and others worry about how well couples will be able to understand this flood of information and just what should be revealed.

The issues have been discussed before. The DNA of a fetus has long been recoverable through medical procedures, with a small risk of miscarriage. But a blood test would be free of that risk, which should make many more women interested in it and doctors willing to test for a wider range of conditions, some experts say. And the results could come early enough to allow for an abortion before the pregnancy is even obvious.

Prenatal testing "is going to put a lot more information about the genetics of a child into the hands of a lot more parents," said King.

That knowledge has a flip side. "How much responsibility are we expecting people to take for the genetic makeup of any child they might have?" asks Josephine Johnston, a research scholar at the Hastings Center, a bioethics think tank near New York City.

If a child is born with a condition that could have been detected, the presence of the test changes that outcome "from something that happened to you, to something that you participated in," she says.

"That's a very big burden to place on would-be parents," she said, adding that it's hard for a pregnant woman to refuse any test for a medical condition because it feels like the responsible thing to do. (AP)

A Wide-Open Field

There's no telling who will emerge as the winner of the Congressional

When Padraig Harrington closed his victory in the 2008 PGA Championship, the golf world was something of a working order. For Woods' enthralling victory on a healthy leg in that summer's Open still enveloped the sport. With Woods on the sidelines lining up, Harrington seemed a worthy player to fill the void.

Golf, back then, had a nice, settled, star-filled order: Woods was the No. 1 player in the world. Phil Mickelson and Harrington, with three major championships each at that point, ranked second and third. Sergio Garcia and Vijay Singh, two of the most recognizable faces in the international game, ranked fourth and fifth. The group of favorites for any year was easily identified.

Handicapping this week's U.S. Open, which begins Thursday at Congressional Country Club in Bethesda, will not be so simple. Woods? He won't be there, because he is again injured. Harrington? He hasn't won on either the PGA or European Tours since the 2008 PGA and has missed the cut in four of his last five majors. What about him? He'll be missing a major

The Tiger Factor

Even when Tiger Woods isn't involved in a tournament — nagging injuries to his left knee and Achilles' tendon will force him to miss his first Open since 1994 — he has a way of dominating the conversation. That used to be because any victory over a Tiger-less field could be marked with an asterisk.

Now, Woods' absence at this week's U.S. Open is a further reminder of how the landscape of the sport has shifted in the past two years. Even if he had played at Congressional, Woods hardly would have been considered a favorite, having fallen to 15th in the world rankings after going winless since September 2009. (TWP)

TREETER/LEICA/GETTY IMAGES

championship for the first time since 1994, after deciding against playing in a qualifying tournament. Garcia? His last victory came in November 2008. The message: Dump the entirety of the 156-man field into a popcorn popper, and guess which kernel bursts first.

Should a non-U.S. player win at Congressional, it will be the first time — since the inception of the Masters in 1934 — that international players have reeled off five-straight major wins.

Since Woods' last major victory, at the 2008 U.S. Open, players from Africa (Charl Schwartzel and Louis Oosthuizen), Europe (Graeme McDowell, Harrington and Martin Kaymer), South America (Angel Cabrera) and Asia (South Korea's Y.E. Yang) have combined to win eight majors. The United States in that span: Lucas Glover at the 2009 U.S. Open, Stewart Cink at the 2009 British Open and Mickelson at the 2010 Masters. Three.

So who might be the favorite this week? "It's like pinning the tail on the donkey," two-time Open champ Curtis Strange said. "You got no chance." (THE WASHINGTON POST)

The American Hope?

The top-ranked American entering the U.S. Open is Steve Stricker, a straight-as-a-9-iron Wisconsinite so practical that once, when he won a flashy sedan for making a hole in one, he traded it for a minivan. The biggest of Stricker's 10 PGA Tour victories came two weeks ago at the Memorial tournament. It helped him overtake Phil Mickelson in the rankings, moving him to fourth. (TWP)

Worldly Contenders

The U.S. Open favorites highlight just how global golf has become.

Martin Kaymer, a German, won last year's PGA Championship in a playoff and then won his next two starts.

England's Lee Westwood is almost certainly the most accomplished player in the world without a major championship, and at 38, there is some urgency to his pursuit.

Luke Donald, the Englishman who is currently No. 1, is a diligent worker with an exceptional short game. In Jack Nicklaus' estimation, he "is quite capable of winning major championships."

Defending Open champion Graeme McDowell, from Northern Ireland, not only survived a brutal Sunday last year at Pebble Beach to thrust himself into the international spotlight, but further proved himself by winning the clinching point in the Ryder Cup.

South African Charl Schwartzel's birdie-birdie-birdie finish at Augusta was an unprecedented run to the title. (TWP)

"With the backing off of Phil and Tiger Woods and the incredible amount of young players, 30 and below, playing well from all over the world — we've been saying this, but especially since Tiger has no longer been No. 1, you can flip a coin."

— CURTIS STRANGE, A COMMENTER FOR THE U.S. OPEN FOR ESPN, ON THE EFFECT OF PHIL MICKELSON AND TIGER WOODS' DECLINE ON THE PGA TOUR.

Canada Is

NHL Playoffs

Last time a Canadian team won the Stanley Cup — the Montreal Canadiens in 1993 — it was no big deal. Well, it was a really big deal if you were a fan of the Canadiens, but, surprisingly, they reached the final and then claimed their record 24th. But in those days, a Canadian team winning it all was the norm rather than the exception.

If the Vancouver Canucks beat the Boston Bruins, it would end an 87-year Cup drought for the county that lives and dies with hockey. It would end a jinx that saw the 1994 Canucks, 2004 Calgary Flames, 2006 Edmonton Oilers and 2007 Ottawa Senators all lose in the final.

"There's 30 teams in the league, and every year it's very competitive," said Vincent Damphousse, scoring leader on the 1993 Montreal team. "It's not like the 1950s or 1960s, where you could build a team and keep it together and have a dynasty. I think you'll see a lot of teams going 20, 30, 40 years without winning now." (AP)

She used to wear more of a uniform — a real one — as a member of the Navy and, later, the Air Force, doing human resources and IT work. The door to a new life opened by chance when she got to know a deaf man at church. “He didn’t like writing notes, so he taught me a few signs,” she says.

Intrigued, she decided to take a class in American Sign Language (ASL) while at Michigan’s Oakland Community College for her associate degree in psychology. “ASL was so beautiful,” she says. “I fell in love and found it could fulfill my foreign language requirement.”

And it became a new career path. On her instructors’ recommendation, Smith left the Air Force to transfer to D.C.’s Gallaudet University (Gallaudet.edu/inter

Gallaudet, officially bilingual, is the world's first university for the deaf, is the center of a thriving community and culture. "You don't immerse yourself in a culture, it's hard to get full fluency," says Smith, who lived on campus with her two daughters. There were restaurants, arts, theater, homecoming and a student TV channel with sound, just ASL.

ASL isn't an exact match for English, says Steven Collins, chair of the Department of Interpretation. "ASL may be a sign for something that requires the interpreter to suppress three or four voiced words to interpret that sign. It works in ways; when an interpreter signs interpreting, it may look like he or she is signing a lot more than what was said. For example, English structures such as idioms are not found in ASL. Those concepts are signed and then need to be expanded for clarity."

And then there's vocabulary. Smith took classes geared toward situations people find themselves in throughout life, such as classrooms, courts or real estate closings. Study included anatomy and "I know everything about the body and how it works" — useful for accompanying a patient on a doctor visit, for instance. Smith says that doesn't feel intrusive to her, "and probably not to them; we're used to it. We have strict confidentiality rules. I don't even tell people where I am."

That could be anywhere as a translator. "You're never in the right place; that's the best part," Smith says. The worst: Having to explain, sometimes several times a week, to a hearing party how the interpreting process works. Smith, too, is expected to be translated for the client.

Graduates have many career options, Collins says: "Deaf and hearing interpreters can work for an interpreting agency or freelance on their own. Interpreters work in many settings such as business, government, medical, legal, sports and concert venues. If a deaf consumer is there, an interpreter may be needed."

Qualified interpreters are in great demand nationally, he says, "and this is especially true in the Washington area." Average annual income for a full-time interpreter starts at about $45,000, he adds. Smith says interpreters who specialize in legal work can make more than average; those who work in education may find more-regular hours.

Smith has a lot of experience for someone who just graduated in May. She did some interpreting as a student in Michigan, plenty more as a Gallaudet student, hundreds of hours on jobs around town, and even some while working at Best Buy on D.C.'s 14th Street when deaf customers came in. And more is ahead in the form of continuing education.

Other than that? Gallaudet has a new Ph.D. program, and Smith is leaning that way after her older daughter finishes high school in a couple years. Meanwhile, she would love to translate for President Obama.

Her advice for potential interpreters: Take a tour of Gallaudet. Visit the interpretation department and ask questions. Take an ASL class (dropout rates tend to be high, so see whether you can hack it). "Get some exposure to the deaf community; it's the best and quickest way to learn."

And don't worry if you're not great at languages. "I was terrible at Spanish," Smith laughs, "but I took to ASL." ELLEN RYAN they want to make a 16-by-20-inch frame, I explain to them that they have to be 16 1/8 by 20 1/8 because you don't want the artwork to fit into the frame real tight. You want a hair of space between on each side," says Sarver, who worked in Michaels framing department for 13 years. "It's a skill in paying attention to what you're doing as far as measuring. The challenge for a lot of younger students is that they've learned to do things in decimals and use calculators. In framing, it's more in inches, in fractions."

Next he gives a demonstration of how to cut the molding, sand it to 45-degree angles at the ends and connect them using wood glue or a V-nail, which is pressed into the wood to hold it together.

"I'll usually stand there and walk them through it. Then, I let them take the reins and start cutting, but I'm standing right there with them," Sarver says.

The process repeats itself at the other two sessions. "It takes a little bit of time to do this," Sarver says. One of the key things to have is patience. To do a good-quality frame, you have to take your time."

Plus, he has only so much equipment. "When you get between five and 10 students and you have to cut four pieces of wood and sand them (and I've got one electric saw, one sander and three joiners), the key is to get someone started cutting and then let them sand and then get a second person started cutting, and just rotate them around," the retired Army reservist says. "It's all geared toward how fast they pick things up."

new book grapples with how to handle ethical dilemmas and keep your day job on. Bernie Madoff. Arnold Schwarzenegger. Unfortunately, we have been plenty of examples questionable to downright bad behavior in the workplace in recent years. So what would you do if you witnessed your co-worker swiping a stapler or your boss fudging his expense report? The answer's not always easy, which is why office ethics expert DeMars wrote "You've Got the Kidding!: How to Keep Your Job Without Losing Your Integrity" (May, $25). We spoke with DeMars about why ethics matter and the best ways to keep business affairs on the up-and-up.

people encountering more ethical situations at work these days?

"I don't think people are encountering them more, but they're definitely handling them differently than yesterday. And thank heavens they are. When my first book came out years ago, ethics training was really on the radar screen that day, and now it's almost mandatory in most companies. People are saying, 'We've got to talk about these things.'"

What kind of an impact does unethical behavior have, not only on individual employees but also on companies as a whole?

"It affects your reputation and morale. If you're an unethical company, you've got a revolving door of employees, and that's very costly in many ways. The worst repercussion would be what I call "I quit but just forgot to tell you." And what I really mean by that is that an employee comes to work every morning, but he or she has checked out and isn't giving his or her best. That hurts everybody.

Former governor Arnold Schwarzenegger's recent admission that he fathered a child with his housekeeper is a reminder of why ethics courses are needed in the workplace.

Can you be faced with an ethical dilemma on the job no matter what line of work you're in or position you hold?

"Whatever your job is, you can get caught in the middle. I was in Wyoming giving a seminar, and a group of coal miners came in and sat down in the front row. There was a break during the late morning, and one coal miner came up to me and said, 'Ms. DeMars, I had no idea why the president of our company said we should all come to your seminar. But at about 10 o'clock this morning, you hit exactly on my issue.' And he had tears in his eyes. Everybody deals with ethical dilemmas, even in the bowels of the mountains in Wyoming. It's a reality."

How has personal accountability become more important these days?

"My best advice to people would be to follow my Ethical Priority Compass, which is really my signature idea. And the No. 1 element of that is to take care of yourself, because nobody else is going to take care of you today. The idea that your company or boss will take of you, that doesn't work today. You have to protect your professional reputation, your financial security. You cannot any longer use those cop-out words, 'My boss told me to do it.' They're not going to save you."

And how has the concept of loyalty on the job changed?

"The number-two element of the Ethical Priority Compass is to take care of your company. But it's no longer the blind loyalty of yesterday. Those days are totally, totally gone."

In fact, you advocate taking care of yourself first, then your company and then your boss.

"A professional relationship merits a lot of loyalty and performance, but it cannot be blind, unconditional loyalty. Supervisors have a lot of power, but you have some power, too. People think it's not their job to police their boss. Well, yeah, it is. If you can keep your boss out of trouble, you can keep yourself out of trouble and the company out of trouble. You do to step up to the plate and “We have a problem here.” Today’s companies are embracing this. They’re opening up the doors and saying, “Let’s talk.” I work with companies around the world, and they’re hiring me because they care about an ethical workplace. They want to keep everyone on track and make sure their employees understand that kind of accountability.

ou handle things differ-

“I work with companies around the world, and they’re hiring me because they care about an ethical workplace.”

— NAN DEMARS, OFFICE ETHICS EXPERT AND AUTHOR OF “YOU’VE GOT TO BE KIDDING!: HOW TO KEEP YOUR JOB WITHOUT LOSING YOUR INTEGRITY.”

ently when it’s a peer who’s doing something ethically questionable versus when it’s your boss?

The bottom line is no, it’s not that different. In both cases, you can open the discussion by saying,

“Can we talk about something that’s been bothering me?” I love the word “uncomfortable”; it’s not threatening. Say, “I’m uncomfortable with something and I wish to talk about it.” And the word “accountable” — that’s going to be your best defense. If it’s a discussion of something you can’t do or don’t want to get involved in, your best defense is to say, “Some-day I may have to be held accountable here.”

Let’s say you screw up on the job. What do you do next?

You’ve got to admit it. The cover-ups are always the worst. Just come out and say, “Yes, I screwed up.” It’s so much better to just admit it completely from the very, very beginning. Everybody screws up. Then assess the problem to find out why you did it. Take a deep breath; the sky might be falling, but it’s not going to be the end of the world. Then forgive yourself; quit beating yourself up. Apologize to the right people, then make sure you’ve set up all kinds of different ways so this will never happen again.

You heard about a lot of unethical behavior while writing this book. Does anything still surprise you?

I keep saying I’ve heard it all, then something comes up on the next trip and I realize I was wrong. I don’t think you can say you’ve heard it all. BETH LUBERECKI

— GOLDY KAMALI, FOUNDER AND CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER OF FEDSCOOP, A MEDIA COMPANY CREATED IN 2008 THAT FOCUSES ON THE PEOPLE AND PRODUCTS
INVOLVED IN GOVERNMENT IT.

WOULD YOU WANT THIS JOB?

Luddites need not apply. This gig is strictly for savvy technophiles who don't care about sleeping. "I am really working 18- to 20-hour days. It's pretty intense," Kamali says. "At the end of the day, when I weigh out my priorities and if this is what I want to be doing every single day, then it's totally worth it."

You also have to love to schmooze and see opportunity everywhere. "I'm out in the community building relationships with our VIP speakers and bloggers, with our attendees, our sponsors, etc., but I also am setting the strategy and vision for the company," she adds.

HOW SHE GOT THE JOB: Kamali started in the industry in 1995 at age 19, when she took what was to be a summer job at a telecommunications company in Seattle, her hometown.
Soon she was interim department manager, and after she grew the department by 900 percent within a few months, the job was officially hers. At 20, she was a national sales and marketing manager for Fox

Communications, two years later she was VP of a teleconferencing firm, and at 23 she was closing multimillion-dollar contracts at XO Communications.
After a decade in sales and sales management, she became executive director of the American Electronics Association (now TechAmerica) in 2005.

Despite her experience, she still felt lost at times. "I specifically needed a way to get my arms around the information that's out there," Kamali says. "I found myself constantly reading multiple publications and blogs on a daily basis trying to find out what news might impact my clients and my partners. And in the process, I thought, 'There has got to be a better way to do this. Rather than going to dozens of places a day, wouldn't it be awesome if there was one place that captures all the top news that's relevant to me?' That's really where the idea for FedScoop came about."

She launched it in October 2008 with one employee: herself. Today she has a staff of eight and reports 1,500 percent growth.

HOW YOU CAN GET THIS JOB:

Before you start your own company, learn your industry of choice inside and out through formal or informal studies, internships and networking, Kamali says. After that, all you need is an idea and the guts to act on it, she adds. Of course, basic business skills and financial backing help, too.

Hiring the Next Generation

millennials join the work force, recruiters find creative ways to speak their language

Culture

The video begins with the unmistakable tones of Michael Jackson's "Thriller." The black screen fades. The guitar kicks in. And a pair of Dan-Hoops swirl around Dan Yates' under frame.

This is no YouTube meme or college gag gone viral. It's a recruitment video for Arlington-based Opower, a company making the energy software company's chief executive.

Unconventional recruiting efforts are taking hold at some companies, particularly those trying to attract tech-savvy Generation Y workers who often hunt for jobs digitally and seek different attributes in an employer than their counterparts. Also known as millennials, the workers are part of a generation whose vanguard is only in its 20s.

"There are some very key differences across the multigenerational work force that lend us to have to be a little more attentive to the Generation Y as we reach out to both come them into the work force, and simulate them to the work force to keep them invested in our company," said Michael Gelles, director of Deloitte Consulting.

Gelles, who has overseen student Gen-Y workers for Deloitte, says the job seekers will be shaped by their experiences at colleges and universities, which encourage collaboration and problem solving.

"There's something to be valued in the way universities have sustained and educated some of these students," he said. "If that's replicated in some of these work environments, it may make the transition easier and contribute to retention."

Like Opower, McLean, Va.-based Clearspring said its best bargaining chip with potential recruits is

"You really want employees that self-select to work at a start-up because not everyone is cut out to work at a start-up."

—STEVE FREDRICK, CREATOR OF STARTUPHIRE.COM, A WEBSITE THAT LISTS JOBS AT VENTURE-BACKED START-UPS.

the company culture, something that can't be completely conveyed in a simple job posting.

A handful of employees there have established the Clearspring Motor Club, a weekend and evening pastime during which they've spent $500 to purchase and restore their own "hooptie," a kind of junk car made junkier. They plan to use it to compete in the 24 Hours of LeMons this summer, a tongue-in-cheek race for fixer-uppers.

Will Meyer, senior vice president of publisher products, said the club allows employees with engineering and robotics backgrounds to indulge their hands-on nature. After all, he said, Clearspring tends to compete against "smaller companies that are more focused on innovation from a product perspective. That's an extremely competitive landscape," he said.

The motor club, or even the idea of it, won't resonate with everyone, Meyer admits. But the job applicants who can appreciate its purpose are the ones that are likely to be the best fit for the company.

"Whenever we tell folks about it, there are two reactions," Meyer said. "The first is sort of, 'Why? That's strange.' And the second reaction is 'Awesome.' And my goal is that anyone who has that second reaction, I want to work here."

Steve Fredrick, an investor at Grotech Ventures, created StartUpHire.com in 2009 when a few executives at small, venture-backed firms complained about a lack of visibility compared to larger employers and how it stifled recruiting efforts.

The website lists jobs at venture-backed start-ups but will soon expand to include other fledgling firms as part of Startup America, the Obama administration's initiative to spur entrepreneurship.

Fredrick said a job applicant needs a certain aptitude for risk and tireless work ethic to thrive in a start-up environment, so the website can serve as a landing pad for people seeking those opportunities.

"If you're an employer, you really want employees that self-select to work at a start-up because not everyone is cut out to work at a start-up," he said.

Fredrick added that he has also seen more start-ups cater to the Gen-Y crowd, whether by locating in urban hubs or promoting a casual dress code and foosball tables.

Indeed, Jeremy Faro, senior director of brand at Opower, said the company's recruitment video aims to portray the company as a place where entry-level employees right up to the top management know there's time to relax.

The chief executive's performance in the video "is an authentic expression of Dan Hula-Hooping and not being self-conscious about it," he said. "This is the kind of company that Opower is."

The video is part of a digital and print advertising campaign as the company looks to hire staff.

The firm raised $50 million in November and has secured two contracts that stand to triple its footprint.

"We just raised a new round of funding last year in order to allow us to hire, and one of the challenges to growing is finding great talent in the D.C. metro area and making them aware of Opower," Faro said.

The Milk of Kindness — and of Profit

new website makes wet-nursing a viable option for mothers

le Jobs

Skinner-Griffith lives in a house in Glen Burnie, Md., with her husband and their 1-month-old daughter.

"We're broke and have the money pit of doom," she said. "Pests, mold, termites, leaky roof — it's uninhabitable."

Scrambling for cash, the 29-year-old restaurant manager decided to see whether she could find something that came naturally: "I ended up having a lot of Wet-nursing can be lucrative for mothers, but finding a client can be tricky.

[breast] milk, and my daughter doesn't take a bottle, so I had a lot of milk in my fridge."

Wet-nursing is an age-old practice. But in the age of the Internet, women need not live in the same town to share their milk with a needy mother and baby.

"Breast milk is the superior infant food" is one La Leche League proclamation, and medical studies affirm this. That's why Glenn Snow and his wife, Chelly, created Onlythebreast.com, where mothers can post ads to sell their milk.

"We connect mothers with babies in need, and vice versa, and also help quite a few mothers earn a little extra money so they can either put food on the table or spend more time with their babies and not have to go out and get a second job," Glenn Snow said.

Onlythebreast.com makes sellers sign a waiver because there is no way for the company to test to see whether a particular mother's milk is healthy and disease-free. But Skinner-Griffith said, "I think a lot of moms offer their paperwork from their OB doctor [to the buyer] to prove they are disease-free."

Most mothers sell milk for $1 to $4 per ounce, but making an actual sale is trickier. Skinner-Griffith has yet to sell any milk, and neither has Bowie, Md.'s Brooke Rey, a 19-year-old mother to an 8-month-old son. But both women have been approached about selling their milk — and many other things — to men.

"Underwear, bra, breast pump, photos, videos, adult-nursing relationships," Rey said.

"I had one guy offer me $400 an hour [to be a wet-nurse]," Skinner-Griffith said.

Both women turned down all their suitors, and neither blames Onlythebreast.com for the unexpected inquiries: "I thought they made it pretty clear [the site] was for babies, not fetishists," Skinner-Griffith said.

Women can also advertise wet-nursing on the site in hopes that an actual baby nearby might need that service, which can be lucrative.

"I was really weirded out by wet-nursing," Skinner-Griffith said, "but I started looking at how much people were asking — it usually includes wet-nursing and baby-sitting — and for $300 a day, I don't find that weird." CHRISTOPHER PORTER

Gaining Ground

Construction workers welcome an increase in jobs spurred by new local private projects

Jobs

You could be driving down Reston Parkway in Fairfax County, along Martin Luther King Jr. Avenue Southeast in Anacostia or on K Street downtown, and you would get a glimpse of the same thing out your window, what is jokingly referred to as the official bird of commercial real estate.

The cranes. They're back.

It isn't just in one neighborhood or another. Developers are shelling out to build apartments in transit-accessible neighborhoods with gusto, and in the toniest areas a few have financed condominium construction. Others are lucky to be providing space for government agencies. The cranes never really left NoMa, the neighborhood behind Union Station, where construction

"We are beginning to see a rise in construction demand. It still has been primarily driven by government needs, but we are starting to see some private-sector increases, especially with apartments."

workers are assembling the very structure that many thought wouldn't be back so soon: a speculative office building — meaning one built without leases in place — by StonebridgeCarras and Walton Street Capital.

Does having more cranes in the air mean the Washington area's building industries — the construction, landscape and engineering companies that employ thousands of people — are back from the abyss? It's encouraging to see dump trucks rumbling down the street, but it's hard to tell whether they indicate a real improvement in business for the area's top companies, many of which shed hundreds of jobs in the recession.

So, how is business?

"We are beginning to see a rise in construction demand," said Jim Davis, president and chief executive of James G. Davis Construction. "It still has been primarily driven by government needs, but we are starting to see some private-sector increases, especially with apartments."

The company, based in Rockville, was one of many local builders that experienced deep cuts after real estate values plummeted and financial markets froze in 2008. Davis said business dropped about one-third, and the company made an equal cut in its work force.

But recently Davis has scored the major projects. It is building one of the area's only new condominium projects, Gaslight Square, the Rosslyn project by Abdo Development, and a 1.7 million-square-foot underground parking garage as part of the Reston Station development, near a coming Silver Line Metro station. The garage will be seven levels underground at its deepest point, take 27 months to build and require 1 million man-hours of labor.

With business picking up, Davis says he is making some strategic hires, particularly professionals in areas such as underwriting and 3-D modeling. He has hired about 60 people in the Davis offices in the past six months, putting the company at more than 700 employees again. He does not, however, see a robust comeback just yet, particularly if the federal government gets serious about cutting its budget. "The private sector is trying to get going, but financing is still very tough," he said.

bers show an industry still reeling from losses but possibly turning a corner. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, using non-seasonally adjusted figures, said the Washington area employed 378,200 people in construction April, up from 368,800 in March of last year — the first such gain since 2007. The bump helped the Washington area tie for the lowest jobless rate among metropolitan areas in the country in March, at 5.2 percent. JONATHAN O'CONNELL (CAPITAL BUSINESS)

Booze Clues

Pairing Spirits

Lesson for an aviation history lesson. It's exactly what you were hoping for when you opened the paper, isn't it? In 1939, the Russian aircraft company that would become famous as MiG was founded. MiG planes — particularly the MiG-17, which American forces encountered in Vietnam, even though it first flew in '50 — combined maneuverability and firepower.

Now you have talking points for your visit to MiG Bar (2226 18th St. NW; 202-461-4615), the (for now) cash-onlyairs hideaway that just opened in Washington, D.C. Morgan. On the mirror behind the bar is scrawled what we are told is the phrase "Buy the lady a drink" in Russian, and the walls are decorated with airplane murals and Soviet propaganda posters. The vibe is casual and easy. "In Soviet Russia, the bartender gets you!" jokes — the bartenders are friendly and open to changing the music for impromptu dance parties, and the drinks are cheap. Beers are $3, and margaritas, rail drinks and sangria are $4. Fun fact: Some auto-race programs change "sangria" to "sanger." That's the universe trying to tell you.

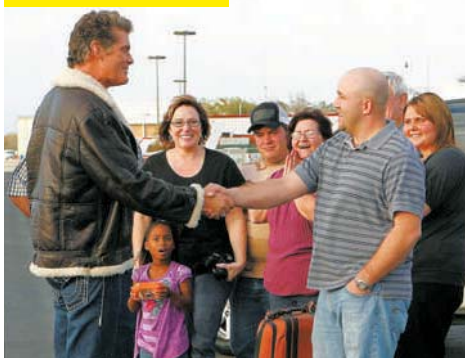

Washington, D.C. Morgan needs more like MiG — small spots where button-downed shirt bros don't go and where there's just enough room for your friends. And if you want to get rid of any interlopers, just order them a shot of Gtini ($8). The ingredients are a closely guarded secret (extensive scientific tests indicate it's made mostly of vodka), but anyone who drinks it will seriously winds up napping.

Couch Potato, Rejoice

It's hard to remember a time when there was next to nothing on TV in summer besides reruns. Entire families shut off the box — with good reason — confident that they weren't missing anything. But in this century, summer is when TV becomes more provocative and easier to enjoy. At your Sunday night barbecue, guests start looking at their watches as the citronella candles flicker. Sure, summer TV addicts can watch "True Blood" or "Breaking Bad" later, but the fact remains that there is a real pleasure in wasting a perfectly good summer on good TV. Here are some top picks from an avid indoorsman. HANK STUEVER (THE WASHINGTON POST)

REALITY SHOWS

↑ "Same Name" Celebrities go out into the real world and see how everyday people who just happen to share their famous moniker manage to live. (There's another David Hasselhoff in Texas, who sounds more gainfully employed than the Hoff himself.) July 24, CBS

"Whisker Wars" The obsessed world of competitive facial-hair growing — beyond the indie-rock scene, I suppose. Aug. 5, IFC

COMEDIES

↑ "Wilfred" I'm panting to see whether this remake of the hit Australian series is any good: Elijah Wood (pictured, left) stars as a suicidal man who meets a neighborhood dog who is — apparently, only to Wood's eyes — a man in a dog suit, played by surly Jason Gann. June 23, FX

"Web Therapy" The brilliant Lisa Kudrow fleshes out her crank-therapist character, Fiona Wallace, who she's been playing in underappreciated Web-only videos. July 19, Showtime

FLOATIES: THE EASY STUFF

↑ "Necessary Roughness" To make ends meet, a brash shrink (Callie Thorne, pictured right) takes a job counseling members of a pro football team and finds she has a knack for offering therapy to egomaniacs. June 29, USA

"Memphis Beat" Jason Lee returns for the second season of this tight little crime drama about a detective who eats, breathes and sings the bluesy essence of Memphis. June 14, TNT

CABLE SERIES

"Falling Skies" It may sound like a tired retread of other alien-saucers-squat-above-major-cities doomsday scenarios, but I've been quickly taken by the first few episodes of this new series and its "Red Dawn"-like narrative of a citizen army on the move. Former "ER" doc Noah Wyle is surprisingly good as father-turned-freedom fighter and Sarah Carter (pictured) does her best to portray a sassy motorcycle gang member. June 19, TNT

"True Blood" A coven of witches + Sookie's a fairy + a pro-fang political PR offensive = delish. June 26, HBO

"Weeds" Some have tired of Nancy Botwin's epic journey, but I'm still mesmerized — and impressed by the show's resilience and humor. If you've been hoping to see the drug-dealing suburban mom in prison, you may be in luck. June 27, Showtime

DOCUMENTARY "Citizen U.S.A."

The prolific Alexandra Pelosi is at it again, this time with a thoughtful travelogue that visits U.S. citizen swearing-in ceremonies across the country. July 4, HBO

Compiled by Fiona Zublin. For more upcoming events, follow the Top Stops blog at expressnightout.com/topstops.

1 Staring at the Blank Page

Dear Natasha Bedingfield: We can never forgive you for "Unwritten," the song that turned every moment of our lives for years into an episode of "The Hills" the second it came on. Suddenly, activities as simple as driving down the highway or running up the escalator became charged with fake-soap-opera significance, and we hated ourselves. But we could never hate you. Birchmere, 3701 Mt. Vernon Ave., Alexandria; sold out; 703-549-7500, Birchmere.com.

2 It's Outta Zeit!

Foreign films can draw big audiences, but foreign plays are less popular. They are harder to subtitle! The Goethe-Institut, the Embassy of Switzerland and the Austrian Cultural Forum are hosting Zeitgeist DC, a collection of modern European plays (translated into English) being read to expose D.C. audiences to German theater. Various locations; through June 27, free; 202-289-1200, Zeitgeistdc.org.

3 Getting Their Sea Legs Back

For anyone who felt betrayed by the Decemberists' concept album, "The Hazards of Love," you should know that their new record, "The King Is Dead," returns the steam-punk folk band from Oregon to the music that made them famous: charmingly retro sea chanteys and songs about ghosts. Merriweather Post Pavilion, 10475 Little Patuxent Parkway, Columbia, Md.; Mon., 6 p.m., $30-$40; 410-715-5550, Merriweathermusic.com.

Sing Your Heart Out

Contestants try to hit all the right notes on 'The Glee Project'

Reality Television

Last I saw "Glee," it had driven straight off the cliff of its own success. I heard screams as cast members plummeted, but it turns out they were just singing Lady Gaga songs in unison. What a senseless tragedy — a show about bullied underdogs became burdened with popularity until you could no longer relate to its vapidness nor stand the sight of the cast's moony faces.

Show creator Ryan Murphy, along with his staff of choreographers, musical directors and casting experts, has apparently been mulling at least one of my concerns about "Glee" — the staleness factor. The current "Glee" kids can't linger at fictional McKinley High much longer; they need to graduate before, say, age 29.

Thus, "The Glee Project," a reality-competition show that premiered Sunday night on Oxygen, is a rather sincere attempt to acquaint fans and wannabes with a sort of audition process for new "Glee" cast members. Forty thousand people, viewers are told, tried out for one of a dozen slots on "The Glee Project," which promises the winner a role in a seven-episode story arc on "Glee's" next season.

"The Glee Project" is refreshingly entertaining, even when it relies on familiar clichés of the singing-competition genre. Unlike "American Idol," "The Voice" and other manufactured chances at a hollow sort of fame, the show promises a somewhat sensible shot at a temp job that might pan out into something permanent, which should resonate with today's unemployed millennials. HANK STUEVER (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Best Bets

The Bachelorette They look good; now let's see whether they know how to do good. In this new episode, Ashley and the guys visit Thailand, where they help renovate an orphanage. Later, the rose ceremony is the scene of a confrontation between two of the beaux.

BRAVO

Platinum Hit In this new episode, the contestants are challenged to write a song inspired by the classic American road trip, taking a trip themselves to get the creative juices flowing.

SHO
10:00

Nurse Jackie Dr. O'Hara agrees to help Jackie (Edie Falco, left) start reducing her drug intake, but Kevin seems on edge and evasive with both Jackie and Eddie. Zoey throws a party to observe Nurse Appreciation Week. Kelly makes a confession to Jackie in the new episode "Batting Practice."

10:01

Extreme Makeover: Weight Loss Edition In this new episode, trainer Chris Powell works with 45-year-old Dana, a bachelor who weighs almost 500 pounds. As he sheds the weight, Dana's life starts to change, but when he stops losing, he and Chris have an emotional confrontation that leads to a surprise revelation. (TRIBUNE MEDIA)

Trading Spaces

The plot thickens on "United States of Tara" (10:30 p.m., Showtime) as Tara's alters start to disappear and Bryce takes over Marshall's (Keir Gilchrist, above) room and causes chaos. Mourning the loss of Lionel, Marshall moves in temporarily with his grandmother. Kate spends more time with Evan in St. Louis, while Neil wants Charmaine to move to Houston with him in the episode titled "Crunchy Ice." (TM)

unions lookout*Dave Siravo, Martine Stello

24, works for Accenture. Martine, 26, is a first-grade teacher. They live in Arlington.

MAIN EVENT: July 9 in Downingtown, Pa., in Dave's childhood church, where Martine's grandmother has sung in the choir since the 1960s.

THEY MET: In high school. Dave's brother convinced Dave, who didn't know Martine, to give her a ride home from a friend's. "Most guys would not drive an hour out of their way to drive a complete stranger back to her house," Martine says.

FIRST DATE: Rita's in Malvern, Pa. "I told her mango water ice wasn't all that great. She told me my cherry water ice was just boring."

STUPIDEST FIGHT: After an ice cream cone at McDonald's.

HOW HE PROPOSED: Before dinner at 1789, Dave went for a walk around the Mall. "All she wanted to do was grab my arm, and I kept preening it tickled because I was afraid she was going to feel the box." He finally popped the ring in front of the Lincoln Memorial.

MOST-HATED CLOTHING ITEM: The snakeskin cowboy boots Dave bought on eBay for $250. "I wore them to a Kenny Powers Halloween costume."

"MOST GUYS WOULD NOT DRIVE AN HOUR OUT OF THEIR WAY TO DRIVE A COMPLETE STRANGER BACK TO HER HOUSE." — MARTINE STELLO

Jamie Fritz, Allie Holoman

Jamie, 24, teaches seventh-grade writing. Allie, 24, is a recruiter. They live in D.C.

MAIN EVENT: A beach wedding in 2009 in North Carolina. Allie will walk down a sand "aisle" lined with beach wheels.

THEY MET: They had the same math seminar at the University of North Carolina, called "Coding and Decoding." "Being trapped in a math geon-esque math building for five hours a week really puts the pressure on a crush," Jamie says.

FIRST DATE: She hung around after school of Jamie's a capella group's concert. "I stuck through all of clean-out so I could go to the afterparty" with him, but I'm not sure he thought that was a date!" "I sensed something weird was happening there," Jamie says.

HOW HE PROPOSED: In front of the Capitol right after Snowpocalypse.

STUPIDEST FIGHT: "I am still furious she does not appreciate the genius behind 'Bohemian Rhapsody.' It's not even that she dislikes it — it's more she neglects to notice it. Which, really, is all the more damning."

WHEN THEY KNEW: After college, when they both signed up for Teach for America. "It was a relationship that was going to keep me going when I felt like lying down and falling into a work coma," Jamie says. "He even made me a sandwich every morning to take for lunch," Allie says.

Jon Salzberg, Kelsey Walorinta

Jon, 31, is a financial analyst. Kelsey, 26, is a medical student. They live in Arlington.

THE MAIN EVENT: They'll say their "I do's" June 25 in San Luis Obispo, Calif., then head straight to Yosemite National Park for a "mini-moon."

HOW THEY MET: In Cabo San Lucas, Mexico, while vacationing with separate groups of friends.

FIRST DATE: A few weeks later, Jon took a five-hour road trip to Santa Barbara, Calif., where Kelsey was living at the time. "We had an amazing seafood dinner," Kelsey says.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS: "Her super-cute smile drew me instantly." "He seemed really nice and kinda dorky."

HOW HE PROPOSED: During a walk around the Tidal Basin. "I was under the impression we were going for a run. At one point, he asked to stop and sit, and I gave him a hard time about having to take a breather." That's when he pulled out the ring.

THEIR SONG: Anything by Kenny Chesney. They both love country music, and one of their first dates was a Chesney concert in San Francisco.

MOST-HATED CLOTHING ITEM: Her fleece headband that makes her look "like an '80s rocker."

Horoscope

MINI (May 21-June 20) You are like- have more fun than expected with someone who may have rubbed you the wrong way only yesterday.

ICER (June 21-July 22) One of your priors is concerned that you're not including others in the loop at this time. You can reverse this impression immediately.

(July 23-Aug. 22) You're eager to get where you are going so that you can feel as though you're spinning your wheels. Soon, you'll enjoy some peace and relaxation.

GO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You mustn't let yourself be distracted. There are many issues that demand your attention and they deserve your best efforts.

RA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Technology may fail you for a time, but you can stay on track simply by doing what you do best — and trusting your keen instincts.

RPPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You may want to make special arrangements in order to accommodate the needs of a friend or loved one.

ITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) A task which seems trivial or insignificant to you is likely to grow in importance throughout the day. Don't be surprised.

RICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Put your priorities in order, and do things in a logical fashion that is easy to follow and assess. Don't wing it.

ARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Someone who has played only a small, supporting role in your affairs lately will suddenly be more prominent. Be ready.

ES (Feb. 19-March 20) You may desire something that only you fully understand — so asking for it may prove more difficult than expected.

ES (March 21-April 19) That which is just around the corner seems to be coming to you — and you're eager to find out exactly what it is.

RUS (April 20-May 20) There's no substitute for doing it right — however it may be. You know the rules, you must follow them.

Go Forth and Fail Well

Speaking at Dartmouth College's graduation Sunday, Conan O'Brien encouraged 2011 graduates to embrace failure. "There are few things more liberating in this life than having your worst fear realized," he said. "True disappointment will come, but with disappointment comes clarity, conviction and true originality." O'Brien praised the grads for their hard work, then boasted that the school (which awarded him an honorary doctorate) "is giving me the same degree for interviewing the fourth lead in 'Twilight.'"
